

Mark Cooney is a Professor at Thomas M. Cooley Law School, where he teaches Research & Writing and Advanced Writing. Before joining the faculty, he spent ten years in private practice with civil-litigation firms, defending professional-malpractice cases and other tort cases. He specialized in civil appeals, successfully briefing and arguing appeals in the Michigan Supreme Court, the Michigan Court of Appeals, and the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

Professor Cooney is the editor in chief of The Scribes Journal of Legal Writing, having previously served as an associate editor for four years. He has chaired the State Bar of Michigan's Appellate Practice Section and has served as a plain-language consultant on the State Bar's Standing Committee on Standard Criminal Jury Instructions. He is also a founding board member for the Michigan Supreme Court Historical Society's Advocates Guild.

Professor Cooney authored the book Sketches on Legal Style and has authored many articles on legal writing, including articles in The Scribes Journal of Legal Writing, Student Lawyer, and TRIAL. He is a frequent contributor to the Michigan Bar Journal's "Plain Language" column. Professor Cooney has also published a textbook chapter, journal articles, and short pieces on legal malpractice, medical malpractice, appellate practice, legal ethics, and insurance coverage.

While in practice, Professor Cooney was a co-recipient of the Cooley Law Review's Distinguished Brief Award, which recognizes the three most scholarly briefs submitted to the Michigan Supreme Court in a given term, as determined by a panel of state and federal judges and law professors.
