

From the Editor

Is there another legal-writing journal that is more practical, informative, and — yes — fun than the Scribes Journal?

Some of the authors in this issue will be familiar to those of you who are attuned to the world of legal writing. Other authors may not be as familiar, but the articles themselves are a fascinating and varied lot that can't help but improve your writing and drafting and your understanding of legal style. Three of the articles even include questions and exercises to try, along with answers at the end. You'll enjoy this issue, I'm sure.

As always, Scribes needs to acknowledge two huge debts that only keep mounting. The first is to the veteran editors who make the Journal what it is. And the second is to Thomas Cooley Law School, whose continuing sponsorship makes the Journal possible.

— Joseph Kimble

