

Professor Jill Patterson holds degrees from Oklahoma State University (PhD, Creative Writing), Texas A&M University (MA, Creative Writing), and Abilene Christian University (BA, English). She established and directed the San Juan Writers Workshop in Ouray, Colorado, from 2000-20007.

In 1993, she joined the full-time faculty in the Creative Writing Program at Texas Tech University, where she founded and continues to edit Iron Horse Literary Review. She also serves as copy editor for Creative Nonfiction.

Today, she has a growing interest in social justice literature and works as the case storyteller for attorneys representing indigent men and women charged with capital murder and facing the death penalty in the state of Texas. Since the fall of 2009, Patterson has taught over thirty workshops on the use of storytelling and narrative law in criminal defense trials and habeas appeals. Seminars and presentations include events at The Center for International and American Law in Dallas, Texas; the Federal Capital Habeas office in Las Vegas, Nevada; capital defense conferences hosted by the Texas Criminal Defense Lawyers and Utah Criminal Defense Lawyers Associations; and the NAACP Capital Trial College hosted by the Legal Defense Fund in Airlie, Virginia. Attorneys and writers interested in the power of storytelling to fight the death penalty should contact her or visit the project: TheWriteStory.
